

The Government of Children.

The highest domestic ambition should aim at eliciting from the children of a family all the more perfect qualities which the Creator has implanted in their nature—and this is an aim which cannot possibly be consistent with that other aim of turning them into mere obedient subordinates of the parental will. Discipline implies ready obedience to orders of which the reason is not understood, but it should always rest on the belief that these orders will be given for sufficient reasons, and not for the mere satisfaction of those who give them in seeing them implicitly obeyed. The first lesson a superior—either in a family, or a school, or an army, or a state—has to learn is that there is no such thing as property in the character of a human being; that when the individuality of a character has to be suppressed—and of course the organization of society requires that it must often be suppressed—it is suppressed either for the good of others to whom consideration is due, and that beyond the limits of these obligations individuality, far from being a hindrance and annoyance to be got rid of as completely as possible, is a distinct gain to the universe.

The wish of some parents to wield as much power over the wills and characters of their children as they do over the motions of the horses they ride or drive is not only a foolish but an evil wish. To get excellent instruments on which they can perform as they would perform on a piano, always eliciting exactly the particular vibration that they desire and expect, is clearly not the true object of family life. On the contrary, character, far from being an instrument to be performed upon by others, should always be a new source of life and originality, which no one should be able to govern despotically from outside, and which, even from inside, is in a great degree a mystery and a marvel to him who has most power over it.—London Spectator.

The Queen's Steeds.

Some people were rather startled the other day at the apparition of a team of the Queen's cream-colored horses trotting soberly down Queen's Gate, London. They were of course being exercised in view of the ceremony at the Imperial institute. Being so seldom occupied in any other work than the cannibalistic one of "eating their heads off," they are inclined to wax fat and kick. The fore legs of these wonderful steeds are tethered in the stables as they are inclined to be restive, and in order to break them in for the ordeal of a ceremony such as that at the opening of the Imperial institute a military band plays at the stables several times previously to accustom them to the blare of brass and the rattle of drums.—London Letter.

A Novel Test for Drunkenness.

A simple but effective test to decide whether a man is drunk or sober was described by a medical man who gave evidence before the Pontefract bench. Two colliers, who were charged with drunkenness, went to the doctor ten minutes after they were seen by the police. The doctor made them walk up and down the surgery, which they did in a straight line, and then they stood erect with their eyes closed and held their arms at length with extended fingers. The witness affirmed that the latter was a severe ordeal for persons under the influence of alcohol, and as the colliers passed through it without signs of shakiness the charge against them was dismissed.—London Truth.

Snakes Break Up a Sunday Picnic.

Sunday a party of picnickers of Gas City went to Rock Dam, two miles below that place on the Mississinewa, for an afternoon's enjoyment. Hardly had they been seated when a huge black-snake appeared, to be dispatched by Mr. Pritchard. In a twinkling the rocks were a mass of hissing, writhing, crawling, slimy reptiles of all sizes and descriptions. The party found themselves in a nest of excited snakes. The party fled, of course. The snakes were estimated of not less than one hundred in number. Among them were two monsters that are described as not less than twenty feet in length.—Cor. Indianapolis Sentinel.

Letters That Reach the White House.

Mrs. Cleveland, during her first occupancy of the White House, made a collection of amusing letters which from time to time were forwarded to her through the mail by persons wholly unknown to her. The last week or two of her stay in the White House, prior to ex-President Harrison's inauguration, were occupied in looking over the avalanche of private correspondence received during the two years of her residence there. After destroying as many as possible, those put aside to be retained filled to repletion the depths of a Saratoga trunk.—Kate Field's Washington.

Odds and Ends.

A Paris sculptor says that the day will come when women will be ashamed of too small hands.

The French Order of the Legion of Honor has 45,000 members, only twenty of whom, or one in every 2250, are women.

Most of the transportation in Havana is furnished by little horses hitched to a victoria. There are 3000 of these rigs in the city, and but one horse car line.

Last year seventeen sunken rocks, hitherto uncharted, were discovered in various parts of the globe in the most convincing manner possible—by ships running on them.
